1. Do you think microfinancing might be useful in the United States? If so, how and under what conditions?

Yes, microfinancing is useful in the United State. It can control the poverty rate in the United State and the poor people can do their business so they can take care of their children, family and protect the society. It has a positive impact on the economy and government. Now if goes towards the condition the condition is simply and clear give microfinancing to those poor peoples which have great plan to do business.

2. Using sociological concepts, explain why some politicians might resent microfinancing programs.

Politicians who are resent to microfinance are because of two reason which are firstly they wants to be the most powerful on behalf of money if they are the only one who are stable and other are poor so they ride over them. If microfinancing comes and people become stable so they can can't rule over them. And second reason is they can't get benefit from the poor people if the microfinancing are not succeed and can't give the money back.

3. What obstacles might prevent poor people, either in the United States or elsewhere, from improving their lives through micro financing? Might the government have a role to play in removing those obstacles?

Obstacles might prevent poor people are possibility that if they can't give the loan back they have nothing to give it against loan and These poor people can't pay for the loss if they had a loss in their business. If we look the role of government in removing those obstacles are clear and simple that government should provide the microfinancing to those poor people who have good ideas of business. So at the end it have a positive impact on the economy and government.
