Six things I learned from Psychology

- By Developmental Psychology I learned about the parenting that parenting effects the child behavior and It is important to be a good parent if you want good children like wise authoritative parents.
- The cognitive development makes it much easier to understand thinking of a person from childhood to an adult.
- Proactive and retroactive makes me feel that I have experience it. I experience retroactive memory while learning the same topics of chemistry and physic like thermodynamic that is similar and overlapping each other.
- Many people believe that a 5 to 6-year-old child can't remember some of the events that happen in their life likewise I remember one and psychology makes me understand that it can happen if you have face something that makes it hard to forget.
- Perception part make me realize that every person sees the problem in different way if a problem is bad for someone its worse for the other and for some it will be like a piece of cake.
- Learning and behavior makes me think that how the things that is not related to a certain behavior can be happen by a person if it became a habit than that thing is learn by his mind likewise I have seen some people have problem reacting over their fear because it has become their lives part.
